

CHILD'S PLAY

The Carver Center in Port Chester was the recipient of a $5,000 grant from the Sterling National Bank Charitable Foundation that will support Carver Center's after-school programming for the children attending the Port Chester schools. The aim is to fill the gap with important enrichment, including creative and educational opportunities that have either been eliminated or have been reduced due to the lack of resources in the school districts.

1. Colleen Kane, Lucy Amicucci and Anne Bradner

GLENN'S GOODBYE

The Bedford Playhouse welcomed more than 500 guests to a private screening and cocktail party to celebrate actress, neighbor and playhouse supporter Glenn Close. The event doubled as a community farewell party for her as she recently announced she will be leaving the area. She donated memorabilia from some of her most famous films, some of which was auctioned off to support a new fund established at the theater in her name, The Glenn Close Fund for Family Programming. Photographs by Peter T. Michaelis.

2. Nicole Gardner, Olivia Farr and Jennifer Stahlkrantz
3. Glenn Close and daughter Annie Stark

NATE AND JANE

The Friends of Nathaniel Witherell welcomed The New York Times columnist Jane Brody to its annual fundraising luncheon on Nov. 7 at Greenwich Country Club. Brody delighted the crowd with her alternately witty and serious takes on how to maintain a healthy, youthful brain. Proceeds from the event will help provide essential quality of life programs for residents of The Nathaniel Witherell, the skilled nursing and short-term rehabilitation facility owned and operated by the town of Greenwich.

4. Larry and Rachel Simon and Jane Brody and Jed Simon
5. Roberta Denning, Lindsay Ormsby and Sue Mandel
6. Wendy Day, Bea Crumbine and Christine Pascarella
7. Nisha Hurst, Natalie Stein and Melissa Levin
8. Margo Tusa, Carol Crapple and Leah Marmon

